HONGRONG, JULY 11TH, 1891.

Tan value of Chambers of Commerce the mercautile community is so well suggests a doubt as to the general belief in with their members for the grievance to their utility. Possibly the curious alterna, have been dealt with long ago. tions in the activity of the more important Chambers may help to impair their signifi. due appreciation for what they actually ever their hobby may be. With us it is all the North show that new questions, or old more. Instead of changing with colleagues of commerce are to be safeguarded in any to in harmous in China. To this cause we their posts, are inclined in some degree to attribute the apathy which we admit is too often apparent in public affairs, the proverbial difficulty in getting together any sort of meeting at polo at half-past-five this afternoch. the China ports, and as one instance out of many, the intermittent energy which char-acterises our Chambers of Commerce. A little close analysis of the working force of these bodies, taking those of Hongkong tions, Ladies, Children, and Infants, and for regular and Shanghai as representative of the Agents-A. S. Wotson & Co., Hongkong. 1483 similer ports, would probably disclose a very simple explanation of the fluctuations in their activity. The two leading Chambers are never, or hardly ever, simultaneously active; generally there is so much discrepancy as to cause the one to be held up as an example to the other. At one period it is Shanghai, at another Hongkong that is in the ascendant. At the present moment it is unquestionably the Colony that bears the palm. We do not presume that will continue; the pendulum will no doubt continue to swing; and the Queen of the Whangpu will yet again assume her robes of majesty. The explanation of this phonomenon which comes readiest to hand is that the position and influence of this or that Chamber is usually the enlarged expression of the individuality of one man. At rare intervals there may happen to be two, or even three, men who make the interests of STRAW HATS $1.00 each. the body their own, and when that happy conjunction occurs the power which the Chamber wields in the disposal of current events is incalculable. If it should ever happen that the two Chambers of Commerce were endowed at the same time with such "men of light and leading " and that they were united in their policy, the combination would exercise a controlling influence on affairs falling legitimately within their province. Such a concentration of force has not, to the best of our recollection, ever been realized. The one Chamber has invariably been a mere foil to the other, not effectively assisting, but at the most acquiescing and saying ditto to the more energetic sister. On some occasions indeed the shifting of activity from the one Chamber to the other has been so rapid as to create an illusion of simultaneity, such as is effected by a clever ventriloquist who by the vivacity of his dialogue would almost make us hear his lay figures all speaking at once. The removal of one circumstances of our commercial life the less a necessity of the position, and it

These general remarks would scarcely be worth making were it not that the members of Chambers of Commerce and those who have so far held aloof from membership seem to stand in need of an occasional reminder of the important-functions which these organized societies may be made to perform. Much as they have done in the past it is our belief that they may do yet more their own powers. In union is strength, and whether in the redress of grievances or in having a stroke of a feet, and willigive an indi- ant's property was in the hands of the Court, GINGERADE the removal of obstacles to new developments. No Credit given for Bottles that look dirty, the organized expression of the mercantile plied. body will always carry weight which the aggragate of individual voices could never do. No Minister and no Government can afford to ignore the united wish of a large body of men, if it be moderately, clearly, and The renowned artist has just arrived on the could recognise the complainant now. I spoke reasonably put forward. And as a weapon is kent efficient by use, and dexterity comes by frequent practice, it were well that the Chambers of Commerce should keep their organism in exercise, seeking rather than shunning occasions of service to their members. Such insolent abuse of authority, for example, as that which Her Majesty's Minister has been practising on the mercantile ous incident happened a few weeks ago in con- defendant. I put in the second memorandum public in contemptuously declining even to acknowledge their most respectful communications can scarcely continue much longer now that the Chamber of Commerce has taken up the question and brought it and it happened that the ship on which Herr were partners. Both documents, the second before the Foreign Office. But why, it may be asked, has the discourtesy and obstinate negligence of the Minister been tolerated so long? Why is it only at the end of five years' endurance that the worm begins to turn? The case which was taken up by the Chamber of Commerce was not an isolated one; it was, on the contrary, the common and the doctor appeared at the sencert-ball. of either of the two transactions. The promisery experience of all who have attempted to open Herr Friedenthal played, charming everybody. note and statement as to age were both handed tablished that it would seem superfluous to communications with Peking during the preenlarge upon it; and yet the abstention of sent British Minister's incumbency, and it so many of those engaged in trade from lonly needed that the Chambers of Commerce participating in the work of these societies should be in closer and more frequent touch

The Upper Yangteze mayigation is now mere threshed out straw, not an inviting cance in the eyes of many people, especially subject, but we only refer to it in passing to of those who are so entirely occupied with their remark that the Chambers of Commerce, es- get out, of the ill-fained place after a rest should be put in the box, as it was highly preown affairs as to have no thought to spare pecially that of Shanghai, failed to do what dence of only dwenty four hours in it. Of for matters which concern the community as might have been done during the long and deficiencies of these public bodies, and it is indifference to the whole affair, which those also easy to go far wrong in withholding who were interested in a particular settle. the talk of the day and is much laughed complish. Allowances are perhaps not al. as it were by default. After the mischief ways made for the peculiar difficulties which was done beyond remedy the Chambers woker public bodies in the East have to contend up to it; but the sanction given so blindly with, where there are no sleeping partners, by the China Committee of the London nor any who have leisure except what they Chamber, and which was so properly rebuked. can snatch from their own business, or from by the Hongkong Chamber, could never their needful and proper recreation. FIXING THE DAY. Helen was very pleased indeed when she received Lady Ennismore's splendid gift. And during the next few days after Francis Roche's return to town, she grow almost like the bright Helen Drummond of old, whom he had met and loved at Brackenford. In her sweet sympathetic way Mrs. Southwell noticed the change, and spokeofit to herold friend, Colonel Walter Roche. "What a strange gladdener of the heart love is, to be sure !" she said smiling. "Helen is a differentgirl since it was all settled with Mr. Roohe."

The achievement. This job had been planned some time ago, but only on that morning had they gone on board the schooner, which they did with the counivance of one of the sailors, who was well bribed, and they had determined to capture her that day, after the pilots had left her, even if force bad to be used, when an unlooked for opportunity threw her into their hands. Their laughter rang out as merrily when they talked of their exploit as if they only had perpetrated a good joke instead of a gross act of piracy; but they were endowed with very elastic consciences. Provisions had been provided in abandance, and Dominick soon prewas set for the Gallipagos Islands, where they had been ordered to meet some one who in their conversation referred to as the "Governor." "Won't the Governor open his eyes when he sees the beauty under our feet!" said Dominick, as he looked over the side and watched the Magruder cleaving the water like a thing of life. "The Governor won't notice, her as long as we are in time." replied Bon, the leader and real capturer of the vessel: " if we are not in time, and he hashed to waitfor us, then look out for squalls!" his work." .. "You will do what you are told," replied Ben, as he looked at him curiously, "or the Governor will soon dispense with you, and von know what that means. Turn in now, both of you; I will take the first wutch." For several days the wind remained steady from the same direction, and the Magruder was rapidly approaching her destination without a sail being touched; the sea was a veritable summer sea, schooner to an inhabited island where he obalthrough the season was winter, and the adventurors seemed to have everything in their
